

The military-industrial complex after WW-2- has always put their interests before the human rights of their population. No politician on the world's stage can hold office without the support of multinational corporations. The fact that these interests have opposing factions, which are currently competing for their constituent agendas, is the only thing saving mankind's bacon. This current economic model, which is hanging on by a thread, is based solely on competition. But the "survival of the fittest" philosophy is a mute point in regards to global warming. The old paradigm of the "winner takes all" is leading mankind into extinction. The signs are everywhere; civil unrest, mass shootings, shrinking food production and distribution, chemical and nuclear accidents, fires and flooding, refugees seeking a decedent way of life, regional conflicts over shrinking natural resources, the rise of hate groups whose violent agendas they hope will stem the tide of immigration. These are just a few of the many red flags to be gleaned from the headlines today. And everybody agrees that the situation will probably get worst for us.

Currently we are witnessing these proxy nations states waging a desperate cyberwar over the dwindling economic and political resources of our planet. It appears to many hopeless people that humanity is a lost cause. While it is true the sun is setting on the notion of competition, the moon is rising on the notion of sharing and cooperation as the new economic paradigm. There is a Arab proverb which says, "the blacker the night the brighter the stars". And there are many such idealistic leaders who are secretly emerging from the shadows. The next few years these leaders will show the way out of our current hell. To some they might appear as socialists, to others they may appear as conservatives. But to all it will be obvious that their ideas are fresh and powerful and will represent a personal commitment to radical change. These new enlighten leaders are currently assuming the levers of power and soon shall make their voice heard. You will be able to recognized the devastating power of their logic within your own hearts. Theirs will be a message of economic cooperation and sharing of the earth's resources. This will drive home the notion of self sacrifice & service to others for the common good.

It is my opinion that a transition cycle will soon begin. This will occur after a world wide collapse of the banking system. During this transition basic infrastructure services; such as, communication, electric, food, water, medical and banking will be disrupted on a world wide basis. Make no mistake, their plans are highly evolved and supported by the space brothers. The chaos will be short lived and the immediate benefits will be blatantly obvious to all. As always, I urge you to take everything I say with a grain of salt. However, keep in mind that chance favors the prepared mind.
